The LEAPS project is a metagroup for making small steps in order to make a LEAP as a community of active citizens. It connects 3 educational and civil society organisations from Slovakia, France, Poland and Serbia. The LEAPS is a participatory and inclusive project for interdisciplinary cooperation between educators, community leaders, social workers, cultural managers and citizens, as it bridges the gap between formal education and civil society. It develops, adopts and applies an innovative method of work that combines non-formal education, scientific research, artistic and communal practices by

	Type			Research collaboration	PROJECT OVERVIEW: This ongoing international comparative research project investigates how male adolescents conceptualise gender and masculinity through peer-based group discussions. The study is based on the assumption that masculinity is a socially constructed phenomenon. Masculinity is actively negotiated during adolescence, particularly in peer group contexts. Current discourses on masculinity are situated in a field of tension between two opposing dynamics: on the one hand, an increasing tendency towards an inclusive notion of sexual and gender diversity and, on the other hand, the traditionalisation and re-authorisation of hegemonic masculinity. 3	Details			USTE research group, led by Israel Temprano, is focused on the development of new materials for energy-related applications. Developing highly efficient electrochemical processes is crucial for the widespread implementation of technologies that use renewable energy sources for their generation (photovoltaics), storage (batteries & supercapacitors) and transformation (carbon capture & hydrogen generation). The main technical limitations for the mass implementation of sustainable energy solutions lie in the difficulty of controlling the interfacial reactivity of their components (electrode-electrolyte). At USTE we study this reactivity under operating conditions, which allow us to detect degradation processes more accurately and faster than traditional methods, accelerating the development of new materials and their				We are a team of discourse linguists based in France, and since 2017 we have been working on the issue of caregiving for patients diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease. Our current research focuses solely on caregivers of Alzheimer's patients in France, but we would like to expand it to different linguistic and cultural areas in Europe. We believe that the EMERGE consortium could help broaden this scope and initiate research collaborations among the 3 member institutions of the alliance.	This project will review the literature on female technology entrepreneurship, identify research questions relating to enablers and constraints, construct a theoretical framework based on Institutional Theory.
